Maritime Industry Facts:

Globalization and International Trade as the world became more developed, proximity to raw materials and to markets became the factors that, above all others, shaped the world’s economy and, in particular, the major trade patterns and shipping routes.

It is generally accepted that more than 90 per cent of global trade is carried by sea. Throughout the last century the shipping industry has seen a general trend of increase in total trade volume. Increase in industrialization and the liberalization of national economies has fuelled free trade and a growing demand for consumer products. Advances in technology have also made shipping an increasingly efficient and swift method of transport.

World seaborne trade figures:

The amount of goods actually loaded aboard ships have increased considerably since the 70's and in 2008, reached 8.2 billion tons of goods loaded and grew by an estimated 7 % taking the total of goods loaded to 8.4 billion tons.

The world fleet:

Developing countries are expanding their participation in a range of different maritime businesses as at- December 2010, today's world fleet of propelled sea-going merchant ships of no less than 100 GT comprises 104,304 ships of 1,043,081,509 million GT; they are registered in over 150 nations and manned by 1.5 million seafarers of virtually every nationality. The global shipping industry is increasingly relying on India as a favored source of its current and future seafarer demand. The world's cargo carrying fleet in 2011 is 55,138 ships of 991,173,697 GT and 1,483,121,493 dwt and the average age is 19 years Developments in shipbuilding there were 3,748 new buildings with a gross tonnage of 96,433,000 GT.

Maritime Security:

Maritime security is an integral part of IMO's responsibilities. A comprehensive security regime for international shipping entered into force on 1 July 2004. The mandatory security measure & Safety of Life at Sea Convention (SOLAS),which contains detailed security-related requirements for Governments, port authorities and shipping companies in a mandatory section.
